Chapter 2 by Windlion

I told my BFF Janelle about my brother problem. She says, don't worry, she can deal with it. We'll see.

She shows up Friday afternoon with a big bag of stuff and omg does it make your head reel. There are smells coming from that bag that make one of those artsy-craftsy stores smell as flat as a parking lot.

In an hour, my walls are covered with puffy paper flowers and plushies, and everything in the place reeks of flower scents. My mom comes up to see what's going on, and we explain ... she grins and nods, she had brothers, too.

"I'm going to do one more thing to help you out," she says, and she's back in a few minutes with my brothers in tow, gagging like they are going to die.

"This is how your sister and her friends make their room feel the way girls like" snarls my mom

"If there's any trouble from either of you, I'm going to have them do your bedroom the same way!"

"You wouldn't," snaps back ... eyes and shakes his head. "Don't care what she does anyway. She leaves us alone, we'll do the same!"

"Just remember what I said ... and you know, I might change my mind. Be nice having boys at the dinner table smelling of lavender instead of creek mud." She raised one eyebrow, and my brothers vanished.
